

Ingenta to enhance access to publisher content through new agreement with Chan Zuckerberg Initiative's Meta discovery engine

Oxford, 28 July 2017 — Today Ingenta announced a new agreement with Chan Zuckerberg Meta (Meta), which will greatly enhance the discoverability of publisher-provided content on the Ingenta platforms by using Meta's free discovery engine.

Ingenta Connect and Ingenta Open, its new open access platform, will be better able to connect researchers to millions of scholarly articles relevant to their work, and which otherwise they might never see or use. The collaboration with Meta is one example of leading-edge search and discovery services Ingenta has established on behalf of its participating publishers.

Meta, a part of the Chan Zuckerberg Initiative, is a unique non-commercial tool that helps researchers understand what is happening globally in science and research with the goal of accelerating breakthroughs in science and medicine. Meta is a literature discovery engine that uses artificial intelligence (AI) to scan the world's scholarly articles and helps scientists read, understand, and prioritize millions of scientific papers published each year.

"We're delighted to be working with Chan Zuckerberg Meta," said Byron Russell, head of Ingenta Connect. "Ingenta Connect offers over five million research articles on its platform. Meta's AI will make it much easier for researchers to identify, sort, and prioritize the most appropriate content, greatly facilitating research."
