Revolver launches Ingenta Aperture platform to support their artists.

Revolver have selected Ingenta's SaaS platform, Ingenta Aperture to provide access to music royalty data, statements and contract information for their artists and right owners. This partnership brings together over 90 years of independent work in the music and publishing industries to help advance the industry and increase access to information.

Ingenta is the leading content provider for the publishing industry listed on AIM with considerable experience of creating transparent royalty accounting. In this new partnership with Revolver, Ingenta will provide transparent royalty data to the music industry through Revolver's artists and licensees.

The aperture platform is a highly configurable and flexible platform that enables music labels to share information with trusted third parties, including artists, independent contracts, commission reps, and printers.

"Aperture has allowed us to seamlessly provide a professional portal to our artists so they can see their data and statements via mobile devices on demand. This results in increasing transparency between record labels and artists which has been well received" said, Paul Birch, Director, Revolver.

Scott Winner, CEO of Ingenta, said "It is great to be a part of increasing transparency and helping our customers communicate to their artists in the easiest way possible. Aperture was developed to serve just this type of need and allow sharing of appropriate information to the people who need it outside your organisation."

About Revolver

Established in 1979, Revolver is one of the oldest independent record labels in the UK. Over the course of our rich history, we have built up an extensive catalogue boasting an eclectic ensemble of brilliant artists including The Stone Roses, Misfits, Scorpions, Diamond Head, Sister Sledge, and UK Subs. In this time, we've seen some significant changes in the way that music is created, presented, and consumed so we too have evolved to bring the music we are passionate about to a new generation.

Despite these changes, we still have the same philosophy we started with all those years ago: to provide opportunities and support to exciting artists that we believe have the potential to make a huge impact in the world of music.
